You are invited to take part in a research study named Problem Solving Study. The study is designed to learn more how people solve problems that require thinking multiple steps ahead. The research is being conducted by Fred Callaway who is a post-doctoral fellow at NYU. The faculty sponsor of this work is Prof. Mattar in the NYU Department of Psychology.

If you agree to be in this study, you will be presented with puzzles on a computer screen that involve making a series of clicks to maximize the number of points you earn. While you perform the task, your eye gaze will be recorded with an eye-tracking camera. Your participation will take about 30 minutes, and you will receive 1 credit. If you withdraw before the end of the study, you will receive credit for the time you have completed. If you choose not to participate, you can fulfill the course requirement in other ways besides participating in this study.

There are no known risks associated with your participation in this research beyond those of everyday life. Although you will receive no direct benefits for participation in this study, it may make you more aware of how knowledge is discovered in psychology and help the investigator better understand the cognitive mechanisms underlying problem-solving and decision-making, which can potentially lead to broad societal benefits.

Taking part in this study is voluntary. Not taking part or withdrawing from the study will not affect your grade or academic standing in any way. You have the right to skip or not answer any questions you prefer not to answer. When you complete the study, a thorough verbal and written explanation of it will be provided.

Confidentiality of your research records will be maintained by not collecting any identifying information. Information not containing identifiers may be used in future research or shared with other researchers without your additional consent.

The researcher cannot keep information confidential if they have concerns that someone is hurting children, that someone is hurting you, or that you might hurt yourself or someone else. In such cases, they will inform people in authority about their concerns. As a part of your participation in the study, if the researchers learn that you may be having thoughts about suicide or harming yourself, we may reach out to you privately to offer mental health resources. You will have the option to decide whether you would like us to connect you to NYU's Wellness Exchange (for NYU students only) or other professional services. We will not contact anyone on your behalf without your explicit permission, unless there is an immediate risk of serious harm.

If there is anything about the study or your participation that is unclear or that you do not understand, if you have questions or wish to report a research-related problem, you may contact the principal investigator, Marcelo Mattar at mm13100@nyu.edu; (267) 340-7645; 6 Washington Place, Room 863A New York, NY 10003.

For questions about your rights as a research participant, you may contact the University Committee on Activities Involving Human Subjects (UCAIHS), New York University, (212) 998-4808 or ask.humansubjects@nyu.edu, 665 Broadway, Suite 804, New York, NY 10012.
